Wage activists make one last push before May 20

Living wage. Subcontractors are seeking a permanent minimum wage.

After two years of rallying and pushing for a wage increase, the workers of Philadelphia International Airport are one of the groups depending most on a ballot initiative Tuesday on whether to raise the minimum wage for subcontractors working for the city.

"It's really just caught fire the last few months," Julie Blust, a spokeswoman for 32BJ SEIU. "New York airport workers just won a wage raise, too, and they voted to join our union. There's so much activity with low-wage workers rising up all over the place, including fast food workers and Wal-Mart workers."

Joined by Congressman Bob Brady, Councilman Kenyatta Johnson, and faith-based advocacy coalition POWER, airport subcontractor employees will rally at 11 a.m. Monday to urge Philadelphians to vote "Yes on One" referring to question No. 1 on Tuesday's ballot.

With benefits, the proposed minimum wage hike could mean a 50 percent raise for workers.

From baggage handlers to cabin cleaners, many of the more than 2,000 airport workers employed by subcontractors still earn an average salary of $16,000, as a National Employment Law Project study found in 2013. The study found the median wage for airport workers was $7.85 per hour.

"We're going to continue to push until the airport workers are actually getting $10.88 on their paychecks," Blust said.

Quoted

"The city of Philadelphia should not be subsidizing poverty-level wages. Approval of ballot question No. 1 will be a permanent and giant step forward for fairness and respect for all workers."

Two cars hit two men, killed one

One pedestrian was killed and another injured while crossing Interstate 95 early Sunday morning, reports say.

NBC10 reported that after their car broke down on a stretch of the highway in Bucks County around 12:30 a.m., Benjamin Melendez, 30, of Trenton, was hit by a passing car as he attempted to cross the highway.

When his friend, Daniel Raymond, 36, of Levittown, crossed to attend to Melendez, a second car hit Raymond and then also hit Melendez, who was pronounced dead on the scene. METRO

Animals. Dogs found in tractor trailer cab

Seventeen dogs were rescued Saturday afternoon from the cab of a tractor trailer in South Philadelphia, reports said.

Police found and then stopped the trailer at Front Street and Oregon Avenue after it received reports of a domestic dispute between a couple, according to WPVI-TV.

Upon investigating the incident, police discovered the dogs inside the cabin.

Animal control officers seized all 17 dogs — which, according to the news outlet, were mostly pit bulls.

Did You Know?

"Catastrophic Loss" or "Umbrella" policies are insurance that you can purchase from your own insurance company to provide coverage above and beyond what is provided by your basic Automobile or Homeowner's policy.

These policies provide additional protection to you if are injured in an automobile or other accident. They also protect your property and assets if anyone decides to sue you.

If you are sued for an amount that exceeds the limits of your primary Homeowner's policy, your personal assets may be at risk. Catastrophic Loss/Umbrella Policies provide coverage to protect you.

Likewise, if you are injured in an automobile accident by someone without insurance, or with minimal insurance coverage, you may not be fully compensated for your injuries. A Catastrophic Loss/Umbrella Policy that you purchase could provide the additional coverage to ensure that you are full compensated.

Adding a Catastrophic Loss/ Umbrella policy cost only pennies relative to the amount of additional protection it provides. Going without this policy could leave you uncompensated if you're injured, or put your assets at risk if you are sued. Talk to your agent about adding a Catastrophic Loss/Umbrella policy. It is a benefit that pays you!!

GOV. CHRISTIE WEATHERS GRADUATION STORM

There I was wearing a cap and gown on Friday, pencil and notepad in hand, at the 2014 commencement ceremony at Rowan University.

It was a special day and a record-setting year for an expanding university. It was made even more special for a political journalist like myself because Gov. Chris Christie delivered the commencement speech.

The ceremony was originally supposed to be held in Richard Wackar Stadium, but because of the rain, the different schools were moved indoors and to separate buildings to watch live-streams of the address.

The Republican governor, along with Democrats state Sen. President Stephen Sweeney and state Sen. Donald Norcross, received honorary degrees.

Christie said he would keep his speech short and non-controversial. It wasn't exactly short, but he did keep the second half of the promise. His speech was personal and emotional, focusing on his grandmother who was born on a boat coming from Italy to America. She worked hard and raised a family by herself, without having much of a formal education, Christie said.

New Jersey Gov. Christie delivered the keynote address on May 16. / KEVIN KUNZMANN

Quoted

"Despite everything, the day was a celebration. Personal politics and feelings aside, I don't think Christie ruined the day for very many people — certainly not for me."

"This gives you the moment now to decide what your life is to be," Christie said to about 10,000 attendees. "I believe what determines your success and failure will be determined by how hard you work. ... You have a leg up that you've earned today, that is, the education you got here at Rowan."

In the wake of "Bridgegate" — the politically motivated lane closures on the George Washington Bridge — Christie received a mixed response from the crowd. But it's not Christie's style to back down from a challenge, as did former President George W. Bush staffer Condoleezza Rice, who recently stood up Rutgers University.

Of course, not backing down from a challenge is part of Christie's appeal to voters and that was certainly the case at Rowan where he weathered the graduation ceremony storm.

Haverford College

Speaker calls students 'immature'

Former Princeton University President William Bowen called a select number of Haverford College graduates "immature" and "arrogant" during his commencement address at the college on Sunday.

Bowen, who was called upon after students protested former University of California, Berkeley Chancellor Robert Birgeneau speaking, criticized the students for chasing Birgeneau away, the Associated Press reported.

Bowen said he was disappointed in the more than 40 students and several professors who demanded Birgeneau apologize and make reparations for allowing police to use force during an Occupy protest in 2011. METRO

Ambulance. SEPTA driver brings victim of gunshot on board

A bloody 31-year-old man with a gunshot wound to his ankle pounded on the doors of a Route 60 bus Saturday night in an attempt to escape his attackers, police said.

Around 10:45 p.m., the man was walking to the stop at Broad and Glenwood streets in North Philadelphia when a group of men began taunting him and then started chasing him.

The man then heard between six and eight gunshots and then felt pain in his ankle and realized he was shot, police said.

Police say he saw the bus approaching the stop so he ran toward it and started pounding on the doors.

The driver, who told police he saw the group chasing the man before he stopped, brought the injured man aboard.

The driver stopped the bus at Broad Street and Allegheny Avenue, where police were waiting.

The victim was taken to Temple University and treated for a broken left tibia. He's listed in stable condition.

Police officials said they think the group consisted of about four to five Hispanic and black males. No arrests have been made. TOMMY ROWAN

2014 run. Republican chairman: Clinton's age, health 'fair game'

Hillary Clinton's age and health are valid campaign issues if the 66-year-old Democrat makes another run for president in 2016, the Republican Party leader said on Sunday.

Reince Priebus, the Republican National Committee chairman, was asked on NBC's "Meet the Press" about Republican strategist Karl Rove's reported comments that Clinton might have suffered brain damage from a 2012 blood clot. Priebus refused to distance himself from Rove's remarks or say he should apologize.

"I think that health and age is fair game," Priebus said. "It was fair game for Ronald Reagan. It was fair game for John McCain."

Reagan took office in 1981 at age 69; McCain, the Republican candidate in 2008, was 72 on Election Day that year.

The New York Post reported that Rove made the suggestion at a recent conference. Rove denied using the phrase, but told Fox News Clinton's health would be an issue should she run.

Clinton suffered a blood clot in her head in December 2012 after falling at her home and received several days of treatment at a New York hospital. The incident raised health concerns for Clinton, who was a widely traveled secretary of state during President Barack Obama's first term. REUTERS

Top aide says Obama is 'madder than hell' about allegations of veterans

VA awaiting care. Delays in treatment could have led to otherwise preventable deaths.

White House Chief of Staff Denis McDonough said President Barack Obama is "madder than hell" about possible deadly health care delays at the Department of Veterans Affairs and is determined to investigate and fix any flaws in the system.

"We're going to get to the bottom of those things, fix them and ensure that they don't happen again," McDonough said on CBS's "Face the Nation" in an interview aired on Sunday.

The allegations have sparked a growing political scandal, including calls for the resignation of VA Secretary Eric Shinseki.

A top department official, Undersecretary of Health Dr. Robert Petzel, resigned on Friday in a move critics said was an effort at damage control. But McDonough sidestepped questions about whether Shinseki had Obama's full confidence.

"The president will continue to demand that he and all of us who work for him continue to fix these things until they are functioning the way that our veterans believe they should," McDonough said.

Petzel's resignation came a day after he appeared alongside Shinseki at a congressional hearing about accusations that VA medical facilities in Phoenix covered up long wait times for patients, including 40 who died while awaiting care.

Dr. Sam Foote, a whistleblower in the VA case, said on "Fox News Sunday" that Petzel's resignation was "a great first step." He said there was no way officials in Washington did not know of the issue. REUTERS

Source: Apple to ink $3B deal with Beats

Wrong beat. The purchase comes as iTunes Radio struggles in the streaming market.

Apple is expected to announce as early as this week a $3.2 billion agreement to buy Beats Electronics, the music streaming service and headphone maker founded by legendary music producer Jimmy Iovine and rapper Dr. Dre, according to three sources familiar with Apple's thinking.

The deal would come after Pandora Media Inc. and Spotify have already claimed the vanguard of the music streaming revolution, while Apple's 8-month-old iTunes Radio is stumbling.

"Apple is about two years late, behind Spotify," said David Pakman, a digital music investor with Venrock Capital and a co-creator of Apple's Music Group. "They need a streaming offering."

With digital music downloads in decline, record labels have put pressure on Apple to get its act together on streaming, according to two of the three sources. The record labels hope Apple can turn Beats Music into a strong competitor with Spotify and other streaming services, the sources said.

"The labels wanted Apple to build a premium service," said one of the sources, who like the others were not authorized to speak about the matter on the record. "They wanted ... to make money through the stream."

The major labels had recently grown dissatisfied with the performance of iTunes Radio, the source said. REUTERS

Risk. Doctors and nurses in Saudi Arabia could take MERS global

The biggest risk that Middle East Respiratory Syndrome will become a global epidemic, ironically, may lie with globe-trotting health care workers.

From Houston to Manila, doctors and nurses are recruited for lucrative postings in Saudi Arabia, where MERS was first identified in 2012. Because the kingdom has stepped up hiring of foreign health-care professionals in the last few years, disease experts said, there is a good chance the MERS virus will hitch a ride on workers as they return home.

"This is how MERS might spread around the world," said infectious disease expert Dr. Amesh Adalja of the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center.

It can take five to 14 days for someone infected with MERS to show symptoms, more than enough time for a contagious person to fly to the other side of the world without being detectable. Health care workers "are at extremely high risk of contracting MERS compared to the general public," Adalja said.

A Muslim pilgrim wears a mask due to fears of the deadly MERS. / GETTY IMAGES

The threat has attracted new attention with the confirmation of the first two MERS cases in the United States. Both are health care workers who fell ill shortly after leaving their work in Saudi hospitals and boarding planes bound west.

About one-third of the MERS cases treated in hospitals in the Saudi Red Sea city of Jeddah were health care workers. REUTERS

Illinois man tests positive for MERS virus

An Illinois resident tested positive for Middle East Respiratory Syndrome after being in contact with an infected patient, though he did not show signs of illness, U.S. health officials said on Saturday.

The man likely contracted MERS from a man in Indiana who was hospitalized in late April with the first known U.S. case of the illness.

The Illinois resident's lack of symptoms may shed light on milder forms of the deadly virus, which emerged in the Middle East in 2012 and has infected more than 500 patients in Saudi Arabia alone. It kills about 30 percent of those who are infected. REUTERS

Turkish police detain 24 in mine disaster

Turkish police detained 24 people, including mining company executives and personnel, as an investigation into last week's mine disaster got underway and the last of the 301 victims were buried on Sunday.

The detentions were the first of the inquiry and came five days after a fire sent deadly carbon monoxide coursing through the mine in the western Turkish town of Soma.

Police formed a cordon around the court house in Soma as a crowd of onlookers, journalists and relatives of those detained grew steadily. Inside, prosecutors questioned company employees, a police official told Reuters.

One man, whose engineer brother was being held, said dozens of people had been questioned as part of the probe. REUTERS

Election. Swiss voters reject world's highest minimum wage

Swiss voters on Sunday rejected proposals to introduce the world's highest minimum wage and spend $3.5 billion buying new Gripen fighter jets from Saab.

About 76 percent of voters in the wealthy nation dismissed the proposal made by Swiss union SGB and backed by the Socialist and Green parties for a minimum wage of 22 Swiss francs ($25) per hour, final results showed.

Some 53 percent blocked a plan to replace Switzerland's aging fleet of fighter jets with 22 Gripen jets from Saab.

The clear rejection of the proposed minimum wage, which corresponds to a monthly paycheck of 4,000 francs (about $4,500), brings relief to business leaders worried the measure would have hurt competitiveness and damaged the Swiss workplace.

Sunday's vote is the latest initiative addressing a widening income gap in the generally egalitarian country. REUTERS

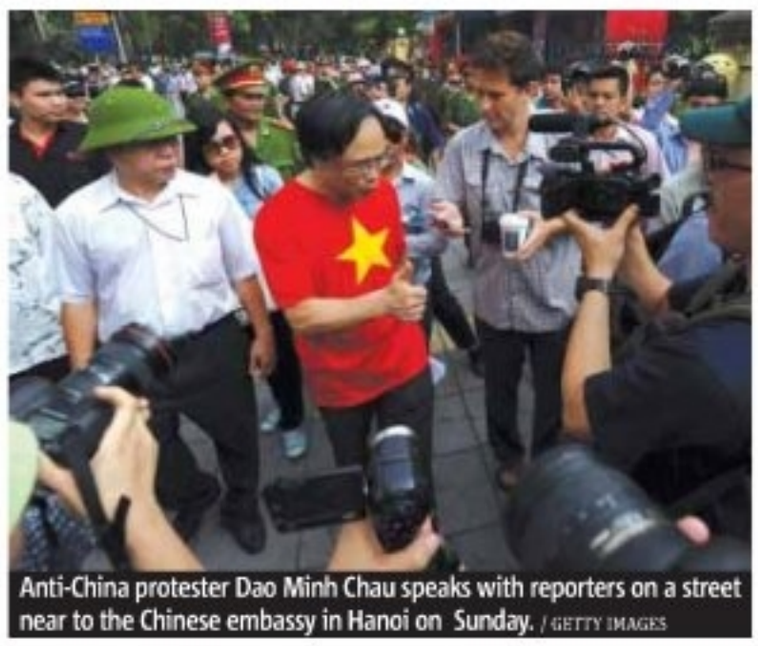
China evacuates its workers after protests in Vietnam

Conflict. Fighting between Vietnamese and Chinese workers broke out in central Ha Tinh province on Wednesday.



Anti-China protester Dao Minh Chau speaks with reporters on a street near to the Chinese embassy in Hanoi on Sunday. / GETTY IMAGES

Vietnam flooded major cities with police to avert anti-China protests on Sunday, while Beijing evacuated thousands of citizens after a flare-up over disputed sovereignty in the South China Sea sparked rare and deadly rioting in Vietnam last week.

China has evacuated more than 3,000 nationals following the attacks on Chinese workers and Chinese-owned businesses at industrial parks in its southern neighbor.

Several arrests were made in the capital Hanoi and commercial hub Ho Chi Minh City within minutes of groups trying to start protests, according to witnesses, as Vietnam's communist rulers stuck to their vow to thwart any repeat of last week's violence in three provinces in the south and center.

Fury has gripped Vietnam after Chinese state energy firm CNOOC deployed dozens of ships two weeks ago and towed a $1 billion oil rig to a location 150 miles off Vietnam's coast in an area both counties claim.

It was one of the most assertive moves China has made in seas believed to be endowed with billions of barrels worth of oil.

The move came days after President Barack Obama visited several Asian allies engaged in territorial disputes with China. An official in Washington, D.C., described China's action as provocative and said Beijing's fraught relations with neighbors could potentially strain ties with the United States. REUTERS

Chartered flights

On Sunday, China arranged two chartered flights to bring nearly 300 people, many of them injured, home to its southwestern city of Chengdu, while five ships were on their way to Vietnam to bring out more people, state-run Xinhua news agency reported.

Critically injured

Sixteen critically injured were evacuated separately, aboard a chartered medical flight in the morning, China's foreign ministry said.

China. Web security will be necessary to counter 'hostile forces'

The New York Times reported that documents leaked by Edward Snowden said the U.S. National Security Agency accessed servers at China's Huawei Technologies to obtain sensitive data. / GETTY IMAGES

A Chinese official in charge of regulating the Internet said Beijing must strengthen Internet security because "overseas hostile forces" are using the Internet to "attack, slander and spread rumors," state media said on Sunday.

Wang Xiujun, the deputy director of the China National Internet Information Office, said political security is fundamental, reported The People's Daily, the official newspaper of the ruling Chinese Communist Party.

Wang's remarks coincide with a broad crackdown on online freedom of expression that has intensified since President Xi Jinping came to power last year. The crackdown has drawn criticism from rights advocates at home and abroad.

"Now, overseas hostile forces are using the Internet as a main channel to penetrate and destroy [us]," Wang was quoted as saying, "using the name of 'Internet freedom' to repeatedly attack, slander and spread rumors in an effort to undermine our country's stability and national security."

Winning "the struggle for ideological penetration" would "decide to a great extent the future of our party and country," Wang said.

In February, Xi took the reins of a government body for Internet security, saying he aimed to turn China into a "cyber power." He said then that working on public opinion online was a long-term responsibility and the Internet could be used to "spread discipline."

The party renewed a campaign on online discourse last year, threatening legal action against people whose perceived rumors on microblogs are reposted more than 500 times or seen by more than 5,000 people.

China maintains tight control over the media. Censorship is widespread and Internet users cannot access information about many topics without special software to circumvent restrictions.

Wang said China wants to strengthen its security of networks and information systems in part due to intrusions in cyberspace by foreign governments, according to the People's Daily. REUTERS

Quoted

"A few countries have used their superiority in Internet resources and information technology to conduct large-scale Internet surveillance and to steal a large volume of political, economic, military and corporate secrets."

Crimean Tatars commemorate deportation despite ban

Defying a ban by their new Russian-backed rulers, thousands of Crimean Tatars gathered at a mosque on Sunday to commemorate the day 70 years ago the mass deportation of their families began under the orders of Soviet leader Josef Stalin.

Crimea's Muslim Tatars are among the most vociferous opponents of Russia's annexation of Crimea from Ukraine and have condemned as "inhuman" the temporary ban on mass gatherings, which was issued just days before the symbolic date in the minority group's history.

Waving blue-and-yellow flags and chanting slogans, they rallied outside the mosque on the outskirts of the capital Simferopol as Russian military helicopters circled overhead.

The 1944 Soviet-era deportation of some 200,000 Tatars to Siberia and Central Asia killed many and is a reason for Tatars' deep mistrust of the Russian authorities. Many still associate Moscow's rule with oppression, exile and suffering.

One banner read: "Eternal remembrance for the victims of genocide — the Crimean Tatars."

Tatar community leaders, including the head of the Mejlis assembly, Refat Chubarov, and Crimea's chief mufti made an appeal to the crowd for unity from a stage in the Ak Mechet district. REUTERS

Anderson reveals haunting past

Also in Cannes, former "Baywatch" babe Pamela Anderson revealed some very shocking secrets. The Canadian bombshell was molested at 6, raped at 12 and gang raped in her teens. She shared her story in front of 200 people at an event for her new animal charity. She revealed that a female baby-sitter molested her as a child and her brother's friend raped her when she was a preteen. Just a few years later, a boyfriend gang raped her with six of his friends. We applaud her for sharing her devastating story.

Sum 41's Deryck Whibley was almost killed by alcoholism

Deryck Whibley admits there's a reason he has been "so M.I.A. lately" (sorry, but we didn't even notice he went missing). The 34-year-old Sum 41 front man has been hospitalized for the past month because of alcoholism. His liver and kidney collapsed because of the hard boozing he's done over the years. Now the doctors say that just one drink could kill him, so we hope he's staying sober.

Hello there, boys!

They both have their own teenage franchise, they are both extremely attractive and they both were finally in the same room. At the same time. Next to each other. Liam Hemsworth and Robert Pattinson got close while attending the Vanity Fair and Armani Party at Cannes Film Festival. While both men usually steer clear of the party scene, they appeared to be having a rather good time at this star-studded fete in the French Riviera. Cheers to a budding bromance and an unstoppable new wingman pairing.

Beyonce and Jay Z try to make you forget about you-know-what Beyonce and Jay Z have dropped a new fake movie trailer to promote their upcoming tour, On The Run. The couple is robbing banks, Beyonce is rubbing her skin and then there's a lot of car chasing — a whole lot. Not only is the trailer to promote their tour, but it is also a reminder to the world that this couple knows every A-lister out there. Cameos include Sean Penn, Rashida Jones, Emmy Rossum, Jake Gyllenhaal, Blake Lively and others. We guess it's a good time to drop this trailer to get people talking about something other than the elevator brawl between Jay Z and Solange. Too bad the brawl was so much more interesting to watch than this snoozefest.

Shailene Woodley is a suitcase lady

Everything that actress Shailene Woodley owns can fit in one suitcase, she told Jimmy Kimmel during an appearance on his show. She gave her house to her grandmother and now has all her things in a carry-on, so she can couch surf at her friends' places. We knew her world views were a little, er, out there (telling David Letterman that she eats clay was a dead giveaway), but we didn't see this one coming.

Godzilla vs. the time monster

Evolution of a beast. There are more than two dozen official Godzilla films — that is, ones put out by Japan's Toho Company, LTD. There is also a smattering of semi- or even non-official ones, including the American reboot out this weekend. Godzilla has largely stayed the same, with the occasional minor — and not-so-minor — variations. Here he is through his 60 years. MATT PRIGGE

The original, mean one

Only a handful of times have filmmakers portrayed Godzilla realistically, seriously considering the impact a rampaging colossus would have on humanity. Indeed, it started out, in the 1954 original, doing just that. He wasn't just a fun toy concept; he was borne out of the pain of WWII, reflecting the anxieties that came from the Nuclear Age. The American version softened the blow, making it fun and adding Raymond Burr as a journalist.

The nice-ish one

For his first four outings, Godzilla was a menace. By the fifth, 1964's "Ghidorah, the Three-Headed Monster," he had chilled out into a mere anti-hero, who usually battles or teams up with the likes of Rodan, Mothra (pictured) and Hedorah (aka the Smog Monster). He even had a cute kid: Minilla. In these, the hulking, fat behemoth became a leaner fighting machine. The good times ran through 1975's "The Terror of Mechagodzilla." Twenty-one years is not a bad run.

The one that meets Bambi

Godzilla's influence quickly ran through the globe. In 1969 he was even one of the subjects of a classic amateur film. Marv Newland's "Bambi Meets Godzilla" runs only a minute and a half, the majority of which shows a hand-drawn Bambi hanging in a field while its maker's name occupies every single credit. The meeting, when it comes, goes about as expected. (There are two sequels, but neither was created by Newland.)

The sketch comedy one

Having made waves (sorry) with "Jaws" jokes, "Saturday Night Live" milked Godzilla for yuks at least twice: as a guest of Baba Wawa (pictured) and in a spoof called "Kramer vs. Godzilla." "SCTV" got in on it too, disguising him as "Grogan" and giving him fangs that zigzagged across his mouth. Voiced by John Candy, he was a more mild-mannered, thoughtful titan, who relaxed while being lightly grilled on a chat show.

The North Korean one

So this happened: Kim Jong-Il, when he was merely the son of the ruler of North Korea, really liked Godzilla. He forced Shin Sang-ok, a South Korean director he had kidnapped, to take a break from propaganda films to make a Godzilla rip-off. The result was 1985's "Pulgasari," in which a giant lizard-like monster who eats metal fights a feudal-era king who runs his land with an iron fist, and which is definitely nothing like North Korea.

The 1998 one

It's amazing that it took more than 40 years for Hollywood to make its own Godzilla picture. The man for the job seemed to be Roland Emmerich, hot off the populist neo-disaster picture "Independence Day." Unfortunately, Roland Emmerich is terrible, and his mega-sized "Godzilla" took things either too lightly or too seriously, and featured thin-skinned digs at Siskel and Ebert. The latter, in his 1½ star review, complained that he wasn't even stomped on.

Roger Sterling

Interview. John Slattery becomes a film director with the neighborhood drama "God's Pocket."

John Slattery makes his feature film directorial debut with the comedic drama "God's Pocket." / WIREIMAGE

John Slattery has spent much of his career playing authority figures, so it makes sense that he would one day become one. After directing five episodes of "Mad Men" — all while playing silver fox ad god Roger Sterling — Slattery makes his feature film debut with "God's Pocket," an adaptation of Pete Dexter's gritty South Philadelphia comic drama, starring Philip Seymour Hoffman in one of his last roles.

When did you know you wanted to direct?
I don't know when it fully formed as an idea, but I would stand on film sets and have my own opinions and generally keep them to myself. And then I read this book and it seemed like a movie to me.

Directing a movie is very different from a TV show.
We'd done three seasons before I started directing, so the visual style of the show was firmly present. So you're not inventing the wheel. You're just executing a vision — partly yours, mostly Matt Weiner's.

How was the experience of directing a film?
The part I didn't anticipate was the realization that if you don't get it right now, chances are you won't. With this kind of money, 40 people and 28 locations in 24 days, you don't get a chance to necessarily go back [for reshoots].

"God's Pocket" neither romanticizes nor judges the denizens of the neighborhood.
No one in the place feels sorry for themselves. It isn't the prettiest place on Earth, but it isn't the worst. And it isn't without hope. No one walks around hanging their head, thinking how difficult life is. They just get on with it, with a sense of humor. They're not without irony, these people.

RIP

Remembering Hoffman

Philip Seymour Hoffman was offered the journalist, played by Richard Jenkins, first. But he chose Mickey. Was there a reason?
He said later that he was drawn to the simple humanity of the character. I think they all have humanity, at different levels or different kinds. Maybe it was something he hadn't played before.

He was a producer on this film. What was he like?
He came with ideas, he was inclusive and he put people at ease. He could be intimidating — he's Philip Seymour Hoffman. People would walk in a little nervous at working with him, and he would put them at ease. He was a very smart guy.

Searching for Playwright. If Tom Stoppard wrote it, the Wilma wants to perform it.

Over the last 20 years, the Wilma Theater has become synonymous with Tom Stoppard. When "The Real Thing" begins previews this week, it will mark the 10th Stoppard play produced at the Wilma since co-founder and artistic director Blanka Zizka directed "Travesties" in 1994.

"Both Jiri and I loved Tom Stoppard's work and would basically fight over which production we would be directing," says Zizka, referring to the Wilma's late co-founder, Jiri Zizka. "That was unusual, because we had quite different taste in writers, but we fell in love with Stoppard's wit and ideas."

The Wilma's founders also share with the playwright their roots in what was then Czechoslovakia. Born in 1937, Stoppard left the country with his family at age 2, fleeing the Nazi occupation and eventually settling in Britain. "I think that's why he took the Wilma under his wing," Zizka says. "Once he found out we were Czechs, he really gave us his time and supported us."

"The Real Thing," directed here by David Kennedy, originally premiered in London in 1982. The play explores themes of love and infidelity through the lives of a playwright and his actress wife, and the ways that their offstage lives intersect with their fictional roles. "What is quite timely in our culture right now is his questioning what is the 'real thing' in love, in art, in truth, in ideology," Zizka says. "Asking the question of what is real in the form of theater, which is probably one of the most artificial forms you can find, creates an interesting dissonance."

The Wilma/Stoppard relationship is set to continue next season, when Zizka will direct the same group of actors in both "Hamlet" and in Stoppard's 1966 breakthrough, "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead."

Insight

Background research

"What is always so exciting about working on Stoppard's plays is that he writes in order to learn something new," says Zizka. "That's why he researches a play for three years before he writes it. So if you're directing one of his plays, you have to follow in his footsteps and do that research."

HOW TO STOP COMPLAINING

Do you have a knack for zeroing in on what's wrong with a situation? Do you tend to focus on what's not working rather than what is? Do you fixate on flaws and let them ruin your experiences?

Heads up: You've fallen into the trap of complaining.

ONE OTHER REASON TO STOP: NO ONE LIKES A CRANKYPANTS.
WAVEBREAK MEDIA

It happens. Even the most positive and easygoing among us can get caught in it. But you've probably noticed that complaining doesn't actually make you feel better. In fact, it usually darkens your outlook and saps your energy. When you find yourself breaking out complaints more often than you're expressing gratitude, turn things around by getting to the core of your behavior.

There are three big reasons we complain — and simple ways to tackle each one.

1 We're bored. When we feel uninspired, we often look for things to complain about. It can be easier to direct our energy toward something negative than it is to get creative and find ways to stimulate our mind. The best way to combat this pattern is to redirect your focus. Choose to shift your energy from complaining to celebrating. For instance, if you catch yourself complaining about the food at lunch, immediately shift your focus to what you plan to cook for dinner. Instead of fixating on what you don't like, take back your sense of control and think about what you can create. When you realize you're capable of effecting change, the urge to complain fades.

2 We're not happy. Often when we complain about the negativity around us, we're unwilling to look at the negativity within us. Therefore, we project our sadness outward by complaining about other people, our surroundings or life in general. It's easier and more comfortable to blame things external to us. But I'll let you in on an open secret: Facing up to the negativity within is liberating, because you can change it. The simple way out of this pattern is to focus on the good stuff. Proactively choose to focus on what feels good and what makes you happy. Scientific research backs up the idea that focusing on what makes you happy really does bring more joy, energy and excitement into your life. Set an alarm for three times throughout the day, and when it goes off do something simple to shift your focus. Play a song you love, write down what you're grateful for in that moment or call a friend.

3 It's a habit. Whenever I notice myself complaining, I witness an old habit showing up. Even though this pattern of behavior no longer resonates with me, it still seems to pop up from time to time. The best way to change the habit is to witness it and then choose to see it differently. If you can catch yourself in the exact moment that you're complaining, you can pivot and choose to change your attitude in an instant. That moment of change establishes a new pattern that creates healthier behavior. Each time you catch yourself and choose to see things differently, you reinforce that healthy new pattern. And that's a miracle.

PLUS

Final thought

Complaining, like any habit, can be tough to quit. After all, voicing our displeasure about a situation makes us feel like we're not in charge of it — and therefore not responsible for changing it. But if you want to escape the trap, it's not only easier than you think, but it's exhilarating, too. You'll feel happier, lighter and more energetic, and it will also elevate everyone around you.

Find a summer internship at the last minute

There are still some great internships out there if you know where to look. / PHOTODISC

Interning. School may be out for summer, but there are still great internship opportunities out there.

College internships are a vital way for students to get real-life experience before they head off into the real world. Don't have an internship for this summer yet? Internships.com's Yair Riemer shared some tips on how to find one.

Think about smaller, more specialized places: Students looking for a last minute internship should make it a point to target smaller organizations. "The big brand names have selected their interns in March and April, but smaller places may need people now," he said.

Think outside the box: "We often think of our friends and family as our networks, but networking in unexpected places is also important," says Riemer. "What about your high school? Do any alums work at companies that need interns?"

Reach out to alums: Many alums are eager to help out, but it is very important to approach them in the right way. "Don't approach asking for a job," warns Riemer. "The request should be about the alum's expertise. It's much better to say something like, 'I noticed you are a vice president at a tech company, I'm a computer science major and I'd like to hear more about what you do.'"

He adds, "You'd be shocked at how many people are willing to take 30 minutes out of their day to have coffee with a young person interested in their work."

Expert advice

Preparation is key

Do your research: Once you get an interview, make sure that you are prepared and have good background knowledge of what the company does and the latest projects it is involved in. "Come prepared. As a hiring manager, I can say that it looks extremely professional when we see that someone took that extra 15 minutes to learn about the company. You'd be shocked to see how many people come in to internship interviews and when they are asked, 'Are you familiar with what we do?' they say something like, 'No, not really.'

Take some time to develop your skills: While you are searching for your internship, it's a good idea to also take some time to develop skills that would boost your résumé. There are many online and offline classes available for software that's widely used in many professions. Hootsuite, to use one of Riemer's examples, offers certification in social media.

"Taking a course is a great way to differentiate yourself from other candidates," he said. "You can show employers that you're not just ready to learn, but that you are ready to contribute."

A retired Navy SEAL puts combat techniques to work

Leadership. Here's how you can apply SEAL tactics to business.

Mark Divine spent 20 years as a U.S. Navy SEAL, and with his new book he's telling readers how they can apply those skills to life in the civilian workforce. In "The Way of the SEAL," the retired commander breaks down he uses his "deep level of focus, concentration and non-quitting spirit" to motivate himself and others to get the job done.

"You learn to win the fight in your mind, so to speak, before you even step foot onto the battlefield!" says Divine. / STOCKTREK IMAGES

Based on SEAL tactics, what's one way people can lead so others will want to work for them?
SEALs have to be extremely authentic and clear in their communications due to the extreme mission risk they face daily. What is required is brutally honest communication, transparency and not worrying about appearances over substance. In the SEALs, one's reputation as an operator and being a great teammate are the main currencies for success.

What's "Front Sight Focus"? How can people leverage this at work?
Front Sight Focus is the radical ability to focus on the right task at the right time, while keeping your broader vision on the overall mission and other targets that enter the line of fire. This ability allows the SEAL to identify, select and focus with precision on the highest value target (goal) until completion. Simultaneously they are able to forward plan for the next highest value target, while also coordinating the efforts of an extended team to accomplish other important objectives in parallel.

How can people think offensively all of the time? How can this help their personal lives, too?
Thinking offensively all the time means to take charge of, and be responsible for, all of the choices in your life, day in and day out — no matter how small. The reality of this statement is subtle. It requires great control over one's mind, even while under intense pressure, so that you have the presence to zap negativity and maintain a positive focus on mission success.

You become the author of your life moment to moment, creating the outcomes you desire. You are less likely to be buffeted by desires, whims and fears that trip many people up.

Q&A

Your book references tapping into intuition to make "hard right" decisions. Can you elaborate?

Intuition is experienced in greater fidelity when the risk factor is dialed way up. Leaning into hard training and learning to "embrace the suck" leads to a deepening of self-awareness. You begin to trust yourself to make hard right decisions such as to end a long-term relationship, leave a job you need but are not happy with or to do something you fear greatly. As a young SEAL officer, I was walking to a firing line for a pistol requalification shoot. Suddenly, I felt an intense need to stop in my tracks. I complied and a millisecond later a 9MM round whizzed by my ear. Had I ignored the intuitive notice from my subconscious, I would've walked into the bullet.

Letters

End the cycle of traffic lawlessness

Re: 'Salmoning is safer for cyclists' (Metro, May 16-18) Jack Dickenson, the well-meaning (one can only assume) but confused gentleman whose letter to the editor was printed in the paper, has it completely wrong, and obviously is not a bicyclist, as I have been for many years, in New York and cities around the globe. First of all, bicycles are a part of legal vehicular traffic and are required to obey ALL traffic laws, including going the right way on a one way street or in any traffic lane. IT'S THE LAW, not a personal option! They are also required to stop for red lights and stop signs and yield to pedestrians. Riding any vehicle against traffic only makes the situation more dangerous for all concerned.

JOHN J. KELLY, VIA EMAIL

This morning I read a letter from Jack Dickenson insisting that it's safer to ride a bicycle against traffic than with it. He went as far as to as ask if you would rather have your enemy behind or in front of you. His passionate ignorance is exactly why so many people die riding bikes every year. Cars aren't the enemy. It's a cyclist's responsibility to follow traffic rules so that motorized vehicles, pedestrians and bicycles can share the road safely.

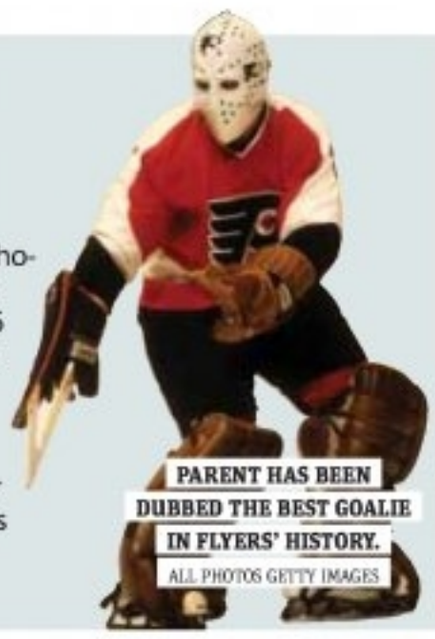
The original Broad Street Bullies look back

Everybody has a memory from the Flyers winning their first Stanley Cup. Here are a few from the men who brought the team its first World Championship.

JON MARKS
sports@metro.us

Bernie Parent, goaltender

"I went home that day after we celebrated, because I was just psychologically and physically exhausted. I got up at 6 the next morning and I didn't know if it was a dream or it was real. Then I walked downstairs, opened the door and the newspaper was there saying the Flyers had won the Cup."

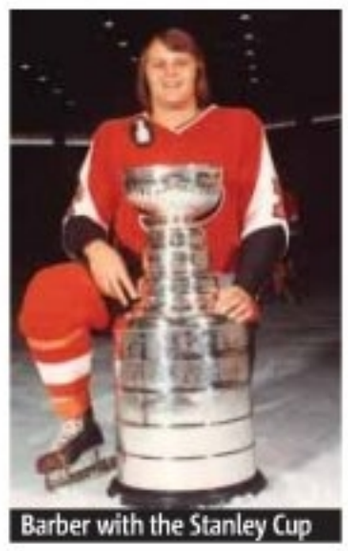


PARENT HAS BEEN DUBBED THE BEST GOALIE IN FLYERS' HISTORY.

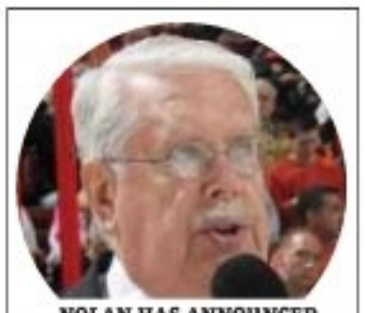
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Bill Barber, left wing

"Everybody studied the board when you came in the dressing room. You'd take a peek at what was on it, but not a whole lot needed to be said, it was a pretty simple comment. We didn't want to go back to Boston and get into a Game 7. But I think everyone knew their role and was well prepared."



Barber with the Stanley Cup



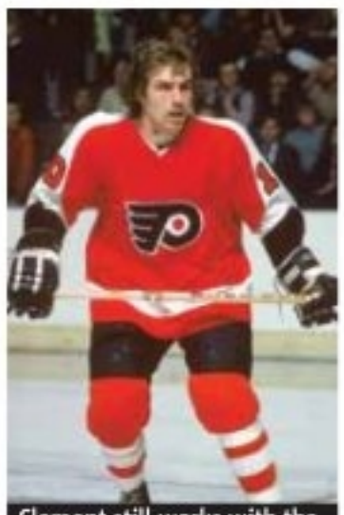
NOLAN HAS ANNOUNCED FLYERS GAMES SINCE 1972.

Lou Nolan, P.A. announcer

"I had a drink from the Cup, but then had to stick around that night, because I'd agreed to announce (Flyers' part owner). Fitz Dixon's lacrosse team's first game. I did it with an orange jacket on and couldn't wait for it to end so I could get to Rexy's. The next day I sat in one of the Cadillacs with Fitz Dixon and his wife during the parade, as we made our way up Broad Street. It was phenomenal."

Bill Clement, center

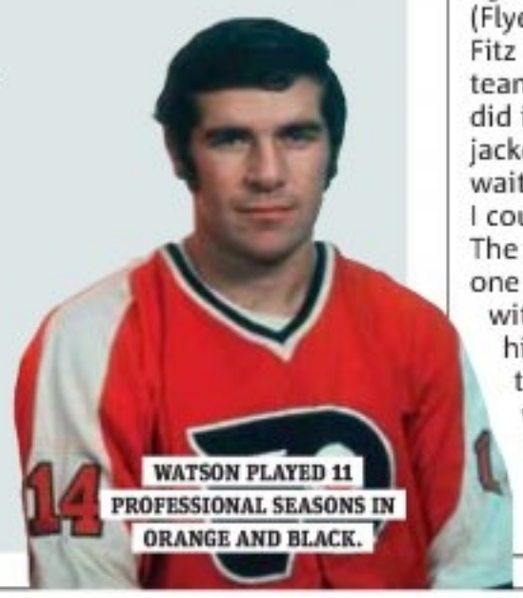
"The third period was the greatest example of perception of time passing. It actually seemed as if it might never end. Of course, with every goal scored time passes quicker, but we only had the one. It seemed as if we were stuck seven hours in that damn third period."



Clement still works with the Flyers in the broadcast booth.

Joe Watson, defenseman

"After the game I got our trainer to get Orr. I met Bobby in this room we had and we had a drink together. I'd played with him in Boston when we broke in together and lived together in 1966. When I got married, he was my best man. I asked him if he wanted to drink from the Cup. He said 'Are you kidding me? You guys did it.'"



WATSON PLAYED 11 PROFESSIONAL SEASONS IN ORANGE AND BLACK.

Flyers' first Stanley Cup

NHL. After exactly four decades, the 1974 Flyers still bring back proud memories for the city of Philadelphia.

Here's what it was like 40 years ago today: With his team down a goal and time winding down, moments after coming out of the penalty box, a desperate Bobby Orr fired the puck the length of the ice while his former roommate and close friend Joe Watson went back to touch it.

But when no Bruin approached, Watson took his time, until only four seconds remained on the Spectrum clock when the whistle finally blew. By then pandemonium was breaking loose inside the building.

Up in the booth, Gene Hart, his voice rising in excitement with each word, proclaimed, "Ladies and gentlemen, the Flyers are going to win the Stanley Cup! The Flyers win the Stanley Cup! The Flyers win the Stanley Cup! The Flyers have won the Stanley Cup!"

No, they'll never forget May 19, 1974.

That was the day Kate Smith sang "God Bless America" in person and Rick MacLeish scored the only goal. Bernie Parent stopped Orr and Phil Esposito and a late blast from Ken Hodge that seemed headed for the far corner, preserving the 1-0 win that set off a wild celebration all over the Delaware Valley.

A few hours earlier, Fred Shero, a master motivator who loved inspiring his team by writing words of wisdom on a blackboard in his office, had inscribed "Win Today and We Walk Together Forever."

"Freddy [Shero] was really deep," recalled Bill Clement, the penalty killing specialist, who's worked as a TV analyst for years. "You knew Freddy worked to try to deliver profound and meaningful messages in ways that really connected with us. There was never a bigger moment in any of our lives, including Freddy's. That said, I don't think many of us really understood the significance of what he'd written until after. And it seems to become more profound every

The Stanley Cup is the biggest prize, but not the only one for the '74 Flyers.

- Bernie Parent won the Conn Smythe Trophy (playoffs MVP) and the Venzina Trophy (fewest regular season goals).
- Bobby Clarke won the Ted Lindsay award (regular season most outstanding player).
- Fred Shero won the Jack Adams Award (top regular season coach).

year that goes by."

After sweeping Atlanta in four games before outlasting the Rangers in a brutal seven-game series, the Flyers had seized a 3-1 lead in the Finals over the favored Bruins. With a chance to wrap up the Cup in Boston in Game 5, they were beaten soundly 5-1.

Back home three days later for Game 6, the team known as the Broad Street Bullies — due to their physical style of play — knew the stakes.

"There are two ways you can look at a game," explained Parent. "Hoping to win and having to win. Going to Boston we were hoping to win the Stanley Cup. When we came back here we had to win, because there was no way we were gonna win Game 7 in Boston. It was one of those days where you're concentrating so much on the game, on your system, the world doesn't exist. Your family, your friends don't exist. That's what I recall."

Bill Barber remembers the tension building as the game wore on.

"I was on the ice with Ricky [MacLeish] when we did score," said Barber, who scored 34 goals during the season then three more in the playoffs. "No one knew that would be the only goal. As the game went on it was tight and Bernie made some big saves. When you're winning the clock goes in slow motion. When you're losing you can't slow it down."

Eventually, time ran out and the celebration officially began. They poured onto the ice — not only players but hundreds of fans who had jumped the boards — cherishing the moment. From there the party moved to the dressing room, where the Cup stood in the middle so everyone — sportswriters included — could take a drink.

But they had to clear out soon afterward, since the box lacrosse Philadelphia Wings were making their debut that night.

"I think went over to Rexy's [the Flyers' unofficial New Jersey team hangout] to celebrate," said Watson. "The next morning it was 95 degrees and we had to go to this parade. I never realized the impact until I went to this drugstore that morning for film and the cashier said 'We're out of film.' Everybody was getting ready to go the parade."

The parade was different from the one when the franchise arrived in town.

"You look at the parade in 1967 when they introduce they had about 10 people," laughed Parent, who along with Joe Watson Ed Van Impe and Gary Dornhoefer were original Flyers on that Stanley Cup squad, which would go on to retain it in 1975 but never since. "And seven years later they had 2 million people."

They came out for Philadelphia's first champions since Wilt Chamberlain and the 1967 76ers.

"As a young boy growing up, your aspirations are maybe to be a professional athlete," said Watson. "To make the NHL and have a chance to play for the Stanley Cup and win it a couple of times, you dream of these things. My dream came true. To this day, people remember where they were when we won the Cup. Obviously, we made an impact in the area."

Hamels finally wins 100th, Brown eyeing turnaround

MLB. Cole Hamels has Domonic Brown, among others, to thank for helping him reach a pitching milestone.

If 2013 had been a typical season for Cole Hamels, the Phillies young ace would have notched his 100th career win by July or August. Hamels started the season just nine wins shy of the century mark. Since Hamels made his debut in May of 2006, he had never recorded less than nine wins during a season.

Well, 2013 was unlike any other year for Hamels. The hard-luck lefty, who received little support, went 8-14, despite a 3.60 ERA.

Hamels finally notched win number 100 with a strong effort Saturday against the Cincinnati Reds. Domonic Brown was a huge reason why Hamels reached that milestone since the Phillies leftfielder homered and drove in five runs.

"It's great that Cole won the game," Brown said. "One hundred wins is huge, but I have to tell you that I had no idea he was going for win No. 100 until halfway through the game. We're all thrilled for Cole."

Hamels and the rest of the team are thrilled that Brown may have his groove back. Brown hit a two-run homer into the upper deck and drilled a bases-clearing double for a five-RBI night.

"I feel it coming around," Brown said. "I turned on the ball twice. I'm confident that I'm ready to get going."

"I had no idea he was going for win No. 100 until halfway through the game." Brown

Perhaps Brown is about to take off like he did last May when he hit 12 homers and drove in 25 runs.

"That's when I started to heat up," Brown said. "Maybe I'll heat up with the weather."

However, there is a big difference between May of last season and now. Last May, pitchers challenged Brown so much, he failed to draw a walk. This season, hurlers are very careful with Brown.

"There's no doubt about that," Brown said. "They're throwing as much as they can low and away. I've just been going with it. I've been hitting a lot of singles to left but I know they expect production from me. They expect me to drive in runs with extra base hits. I think that's going to come. I feel good after [getting a pair of extra base hits]."

Brown's biggest cheerleader Ben Revere was smiling when asked about his outfield mate. "It was only a matter of time until he got it together," Revere said.
